

Internal Review

What is an Internal Review?

An internal review is a systemic way of looking back on how a prior complaint management or decision-making process was conducted.

An Internal Review is an independent process which will consider information from various sources.

The Complaints Unit is responsible for the conduct of an Internal Review.

Is an Internal Review the same as a complaint?

No - an Internal Review will not involve reinvestigation of the complaint or of a decision. An Internal Review will look at the appropriateness of how a complaint or decision-making process was undertaken.

Where an Internal Review process identifies that the original complaint management or decision-making process was not appropriate, a recommendation to the relevant area will be made.

How do I request an Internal Review?

If you are dissatisfied with how a complaint management or decision-making process was handled, you have the right to request that the Complaints Unit undertake an Internal Review.

In order for the Complaints Unit to conduct an Internal Review, you will need to identify and provide specific and measurable grounds or reasons for your dissatisfaction with the process.

Requests for Internal Reviews are made to the department's Complaints Unit. You can request an Internal Review by contacting the Complaints Unit in writing, by phone, by email, by Web-chat, or in person.

What would be grounds for an Internal Review?

Grounds for an Internal Review should identify what you consider was incorrect in the process of responding to your complaint or making a decision.

The following are examples of specific and measurable grounds for the conduct of an Internal Review:

- A complainant was not provided with regular updates regarding the progress of their complaint.
- All evidence was not considered.

Where appropriate, an officer from the Complaints Unit can assist you in developing appropriate grounds for the conduct of an Internal Review.

Are there time limits on the conduct of an Internal Review?

Yes - a request for an Internal Review must be made within 12 months after you have been provided with an outcome to a complaint management or decision-making process.

Requests for the conduct of Internal Reviews outside the 12 month timeframe may be considered if exceptional circumstances can be demonstrated.

What happens in the Internal Review process?

The Internal Review will be conducted by a Complaints officer who is independent of the original complaint management or decision-making process.

During the conduct of the Internal Review, various sources of information relevant to the grounds presented will be examined. The Internal Review will determine if the complaint management or decision-making process was appropriate in terms of relevant legislation, policies, procedures or service standards.

How long does an Internal Review take?

Internal Reviews will be conducted as soon as practicable, however no longer than 45 business days.

You will be provided with an opportunity to provide feedback on the outcomes of the Internal Review prior to finalisation of the review.

What is expected of me in the conduct of an Internal Review?

You can expect that the department will be prompt, fair and professional when conducting the Internal Review.

The department expects that you will provide us with necessary assistance and cooperation when we conduct the Internal Review. This includes making yourself available and or contactable where appropriate and providing necessary information when it is requested of you.

The department also expects that you will engage with the complaints officer in a courteous and respectful manner throughout the conduct of the internal review.

What if I remain dissatisfied at the conclusion of the Internal Review?

If you remain dissatisfied at the conclusion of the Internal Review, you have the right to seek external review of your complaint management or decision-making process with the Office of the Queensland Ombudsman.

The Queensland Ombudsman provides external oversight of the department's complaints system.

You can contact the Ombudsman by:

- Telephone on 3005 7000 or 1800 068 908;
- Post to GPO Box 3314, Brisbane Q 4001;
